Exploring Critical Issues in Education

"Lawmakers want to ban discomfort in schools. But Black history isn't always comfortable"

"In January, Georgia lawmakers introduced four bills that would ban teaching concepts that cause "guilt, anguish, or any other form of psychological distress" because of a student's race, sex or identity. Even if they haven't passed yet, Lewis says, the proposed laws have had an impact..."

Integrated Language Development through Translanguaging Lenses

Linguistically inclusive pedagogies assist us when amplifying how we educators strategically and intentionally identify, value, embrace, and include all the assets language learners bring to the classroom. In this conference, we want to challenge how we scaffold and support language development. Collaborating and sharing current practices, together we will dismantle monolingual/English only hegemony when defining constructs such as language proficiency and language dominance.
